Shipwrecks

While not accepting the Medieval definition that 'A ship is not a wreck provided a man, cat or dog escapes from it alive', these tables concentrate on those ships that were wrecked on, or just off, shore, between Fairlight, East Sussex, and Seabrook, Hythe, Kent. Those ships that sank off shore as a result of collisions or those that ran aground but were subsequently towed or floated off have, for the most part, been omitted.

Obviously this is a very selective list as one can never know how many vessels have come to grief on this part of the coast. The earliest records only exist because claims, as to who was entitled to the vessel's fittings and cargo, were recorded in state papers. The note that 1000 persons perished at Dungeness for want a lighthouse in the year before its erection (CSP Dom. James I, 27.02.1621) even if not taken literally does suggest that many unrecorded ships were lost there.

No allowance has been made for the changes that have occurred in the profile of the coast over the last 720 years when assigning National Grid References to wreck sites.

From 1 July 1884 Lloyd's List is entitled Shipping and Mercantile Gazette & Lloyd's List and the numbering system of individual copies changes.

For convenience the publication continues to be abbreviated as Lloyd's List in References.

The convention established by Larn & Larn (1995, xvii) for a ship's Country of Origin has been followed.

The wrecks on the coast of East Sussex [TQ] are listed before those of Kent [TR] - in each case the records are set out in date order.
